ARTIFICIAL SWEETENERS VERSUS NATURAL SWEETENERS

Natural sweeteners exist or are produced by nature, without added chemicals or fancy machinery. The only sugars that are optimal to eat are wild, non-hybridized, seeded fruits, and the natural sugars and starches in living vegetables, trees, seeds, nuts, and roots. The following are considered natural sweeteners: maple viduals' well-being that is not accounted for by the price system. A more complete discussion of the nature of externalities will be presented in Chapter 24, but here we can describe why the presence of such nonmarket interactions interferes with the ability of the price system to allocate resources efficiently. With externalities, market prices no longer reflect all of a good's costs of ...

Natural economy

Natural economy. As a corollary, the majority of goods produced in a system of natural economy are not produced for the purpose of exchanging them, but for direct consumption by the producers ( subsistence ). As such, natural economies tend to be self-contained, where all the goods consumed are produced domestically.
